Course Content:	This course examines the psychological foundations of close relationships, their fundamental concepts, and the processes spanning from the formation to the dissolution of relationships from a theoretical perspective. Fundamental relational dynamics such as attachment, love, friendship, communication, conflict, and forgiveness are examined in light of scientific research. In addition, problem areas such as dating violence, manipulation, and communication barriers are discussed, and risky or challenging processes that may arise in relationships are evaluated. The course aims to enable students to analyze close relationships within a multifaceted and holistic psychological framework.
