Course Content:

international relations and to provide insights into its economic, political, cultural, and technological dimensions. Students will define and explain the effects of globalization on states, international institutions, multinational corporations, and civil society organizations; analyze the roles of different actors; and evaluate the consequences of globalization for security, inequality, identity, environmental issues, and international cooperation. In addition, students will apply theoretical knowledge to contemporary examples and, by comparing different approaches to globalization, will generate alternative interpretations.
